Meetings with candidates to be closed

By STEVE CARPENTER
and ALAN JUDD

A Board of Regents committee last night voted to close on-campus meetings planned between the five final presidential candidates and campus groups.

The action was taken in a closed session that an assistant state attorney general said last night may have violated state open meetings laws.

The five finalists will have a luncheon meeting with the Faculty Senate, the Academic Council, the Administrative Council, Associated Student Government and the Board of Regents. There will also be a reception for each candidate with community leaders.

There will be no meetings that anyone not in those groups can attend, committee Chairman Ronald Clark, a regent from Franklin, said.

He said students will be represented through ASG's meeting with the candidates. ASG has about 50 members.

Clark said the committee met in closed session because the committee members thought that they might want to consider asking some of the candidates for information that could have constituted an invasion of privacy if that information had been released.

Five out-of-state men still in president's race

By ALAN JUDD

The Board of Regents Saturday named five out-of-state educators as the finalists in the race for president, making certain that Western's fifth president will have no more than minimal ties to the university.

After a two-hour and 20-minute closed session, the board named these men as finalists:

—S. Kern Alexander, director of the interdisciplinary institute at the University of Florida at Gainesville.

—Norman A. Baxter, president of California State University at Fresno.

—Todd H. Bullard, provost and academic affairs vice president at Rochester Institute of Technology in Rochester, N. Y.

—James E. Drinnon, chancellor at the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga.

—Donald W. Zacharias, executive assistant to the chancellor of The University of Texas system at Austin, Texas.

Nightmare

Student's normal weekend disrupted by killer winds...

By KEN MORRIS

For Jeff Foster, Saturday's tornado in neighboring Barren County turned a potentially normal weekend into a nightmare.

The tornado resulted in the death of one child, injured 18 persons and caused extensive property damage.

Foster, a 29-year-old graduate student at Western, is from Poynters Lake, where the heaviest damage occurred.

According to Foster, the evening began when he visited his cousin, Tommy Poynter. Foster said Poynter had been listening to a police scanner when the tornado was first sighted at Bon Ayr, a community 10 miles west of Glasgow. Five minutes later, he said, the electricity went off and the rain that was falling got heavier.

The tornado sounded "like a train or a low flying plane," Foster said. "We heard the roar, and that's when it started." Events happened too fast for preparation.

Foster said he went to the door to see what was going on when a metal shed 60 yards away flew into the air.

"I knew to get away from the glass, and about that time, it broke behind me," he said.

Foster said he headed for the ... Campus warning system has apparent flaws

By STEVE CARPENTER

A tornado touched down Saturday near Glasgow, about 40 miles from Western, killing one person.

May 12, 1978, a tornado hit northwest Warren County.

And five years ago today, a series of tornadoes hit Kentucky, killing 71 persons.

All the tornadoes have missed Western. That's very fortunate, because the tornado warning system apparently can't properly warn campus residents.

A telephone warning system is used to notify the campus if a tornado is spotted and appears to be moving toward Western.

The idea is a pyramid effect. The public safety department calls seven administrators, who in turn notify directors of campus buildings.

The building director then notifies people in the building; everyone goes into a safe area; and nobody gets seriously hurt, theoretically.

It looks good, but only on paper.

One administrator public safety would call is housing director Horace Shrader. When questioned about how the plan works, Shrader said, "I would have to get out the plan and read it."

"I haven't reviewed this thing (the plan) since it was written," he said.

The dorm directors have instructions given to them in a handbook, Shrader said. But the handbooks apparently have not been on all director's reading lists.

Hank Sanders, Pearce-Ford Tower assistant director, said he could not say what the procedures for warning dorm's residents are, "because I don't have my director's handbook."

Shrader, Sanders and others might do well to learn their instructions — with an average of 10 minutes or less needed to get building occupants to safety, there wouldn't be time to study the warning system.

Some dorm directors have at least partially learned their procedures, though. Ken Dyrsen, Poland Hall director, said he would have resident assistants go door-to-door and warn residents.

Dyrsen said he would have residents go to stairwells or a stable part of the building away president to be named by May 1. Alexander is the only candidate with Kentucky ties. He is a Kentucky native, and he graduated from Centre College and got a master's degree from Western.

The candidates will begin visiting the campus within about 10 days, Cole said. Cole appointed a committee to plan the visits, in which the candidates will meet with students, faculty and staff members.

Members of the committee are Regents Ronald Clark, William Buckman and Tom Emberton and presidential screening committee members Harry Largen and Ken Brenner.

The selection of the final five began the last step of choosing the next president. The process started last Sept. 9, when Dero Dowling announced his retirement after more than nine years in the the job. (His resignation took effect Jan. 8. Dr. John Minton has been interim president since.)

Cole told reporters after Saturday's meeting that some of the candidates are in contention for jobs at other universities.

"Two, if not three, are under consideration at other comparable institutions as president or provost," he said. "But I consider that a very positive factor in that these are the kinds of people who are in demand."

However, Cole said, there won't be any competition between Western and other schools trying to hire the finalists here.

"I have every reason to believe that that would not occur," he said. "Each of the five, if asked, would accept the presidency at Western."

Cole said that in the closed session regents "simply discussed information and observations from the visits" to the candidates.

He said each regent was asked to talk "in terms of his impressions of those persons he personally visited. Then we tried to make some comparisons."

And he said all finalists have "the unanimous support" of each regent. All five were nominated, Cole said.

The board chose the five from 13 candidates. One of the 14 finalists, Mark Chamberlain, president of Glassboro (N.J.) State College, withdrew from contention last week.

Cole said the new president's salary will have to be negotiated. "I think that's a factor open to consideration. It could be more or it could be less" than the approximately $50,000 paid to Downing.

More than 170 people were originally in the running for the job. The regents earlier this semester narrowed the number to 20, and that number was reduced to 14 last month.

Non-students can use game floor

Non-students may use some of the facilities on the university center fourth floor if Western students aren't using them, according to Lee Murray, university center staff assistant.

The non-students can use foosball, air hockey and the electronic games, and they may play table tennis if they have their own equipment, he said.

But the non-students can't bowl, play billiards or use the board games without a Western identification card.

Scott Bachert, university center employee, said that whether non-students are allowed to use some of the games depends on how crowded the floor is.

On busy nights the university center staff asks game players for IDs. If a person doesn't have one, he is asked to stop playing the game, Bachert said.

If there are non-students playing the games and students want to play it also, the non-students must finish their game and let the students play.

Non-students are allowed in the building, he said, and they can watch television and do other things that don't require an ID.

Center board to choose activities

By BRYAN ARMSTRONG

Control of activities at Western—formerly in the hands of Associated Student Government—has been given to a revamped University Center Board, following action by the Board of Regents Saturday.

The regents had rejected a similar proposal last April. However, this plan passed unanimously after being approved by President John Minton.

Instead of being run by ASG, activities such as lectures and concerts will now be selected by a committee comprising ASG's president, activities vice president and one member of its congress; representatives of the Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils and United Black Students; one person each from the men's and women's residence hall councils; two other students; and three faculty members.

The student affairs dean and university centers director will serve in an ex-officio capacity.

The ASG-sponsored proposal was submitted at Saturday's meeting so it could be put into effect in the fall and be included in the next operating budget, which should be completed in April. Its activities will receive a budget allotment of $80,000 a year, according to Larry Berry, associate student affairs dean. Berry was chairman of the university committee that drew up the plan.

"I think we've come up with a well-balanced representation of a center-board type approach,"

Bandy pleads guilty to sexual misconduct

A former Western custodian entered a plea of guilty to a reduced charge of sexual misconduct Thursday in Warren Circuit Court.

Randy Joey Bandy, 324 E. 12th St., entered the plea in connection with the Nov. 21, 1978, rape of a female Western student in the fine arts center.

Bandy was arrested by campus police and was indicted by a Warren County grand jury on a charge of first-degree rape Jan. 31.

The court has recommended a five-year prison term for Bandy. The maximum sentence for the offense is a 30-year prison term. Sentencing is scheduled for later this month.

Scholars honored

More than 1,300 Western students were honored Sunday at the annual honors convocation for those with grade point averages of 3.3 and above.

Initiated in 1972, the convocation is to "award the abilities and efforts of superior students," according to Dr. James Davis, academic affairs vice president and chairman of Sunday's ceremony.

Minton said. "This in no way diminishes the office of student affairs in administration of student activities."

The new center board will include a personnel committee that will determine membership of various program committees for contemporary music, lectures, art and exhibits, recreation and leisure activities.

The personnel committee will be composed of ASG's president and activities vice president, two other students and one faculty member. The university centers director will be an ex-officio member.

In other business:

—Robert Nelson, business and public affairs college dean, presented the board with criteria his college must meet to become accredited. The college is trying to become accredited by fall 1981.

—U.S. Rep. William Natcher, D-Ky., was awarded an honorary doctorate of law by the regents. Natcher has been in Congress since 1953.

—After being in closed session for two hours and 20 minutes, the regents chose the final five candidates for Western's next president: Dr. Kern Alexander, interdisciplinary institute director at the University of Florida; Dr. Todd Bullard, provost and academic affairs vice president at the Rochester (N.Y.) Institute of Technology; Dr. Norman Baxter, president of California State University at Fresno; Dr. James Drinnon, chancellor of the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga; and Dr. Donald Zacharias, assistant to the chancellor of the University of Texas system.

The candidates will visit Western, possibly within the next 10 days, board Chairman J. David Cole said.

—The regents decided to allow the biology department head to be the university's official custodian of tax-free alcohol used for academic programs.

—Owen Lawson, physical plant administrator, said that if the agriculture and exposition center is not completed by April 26, the job's contractor, Ernest Simpson Construction Co. of Glasgow, will be fined $300 a day until the work is completed. That's provided the delay isn't justified, Lawson said.

—The board expressed sympathy to the family of Dr. William R. Walls, who died last March 26. Walls was 33 and had taught French here since 1971.

D QUARTERS

Care should be taken in selection

After six months of cautious searching, the Board of Regents Saturday named the five finalists for Western's presidency.

The regents' policy of deliberating slowly about the merits of each candidate before coming to a decision has so far been commendable. By working slowly, the regents stand the best chance of picking the right person for the job.

But the final steps in the process of picking a president—the visits of the candidates to campus and the regents' vote—will be over soon if the process goes as planned.

Board Chairman J. David Cole said last week that he believes the next president will be chosen by May 1.

He also said it will be about 10 days before the first of the candidates will arrive on campus for visits with students, faculty and staff.

That leaves only three weeks between the time the first candidate visits Western until the regents plan to make their decision. That may not be enough time to come to a good decision.

There are, of course, advantages to naming a president by May 1. The new president would be available to study and make recommendations on the 1979-80 budget, which will be voted on by the regents this summer.

Another advantage is that students and faculty would know who their new president is before the end of the school year, eliminating the uncertainty of waiting between semesters.

But the disadvantages seem to outweigh the advantages. The students and faculty should be given ample time to study the candidates' qualifications. After all, these are the people who will have the most contact with the new president during his term.

The regents are spread throughout the state and won't have day-to-day contact with the man. They should listen to the impressions of the students, faculty and staff, who will be most affected by the change.

The regents need to let caution be their guide. After all, wouldn't it be better to be late than wrong?

For its decisions about student activities, Associated Student Government has been the butt of much criticism—often justifiably—in recent years.

But the success or failure of future concerts and lectures will depend on another group.

The board Saturday approved a new University Center Board to coordinate activities on campus beginning next fall. So instead of centering responsibility on ASG, more factions of the student community will now have a say.

This means that students from a wider base will help determine what entertainment acts are invited here. It's a good idea.

Also at the meeting, the regents extended a rather laughable honor to U.S. Rep. William Natcher.

Natcher, who has been in Congress for 25 years, was given an honorary doctorate of law from the university. The thought was nice. But the thing is, Western doesn't even have a law school.

It's a good thing the degrees aren't valid. Imagine if the regents gave away doctorates in medicine.

Letters to the editor

Questions house buy

In the March 6 Herald, a story was printed referring to the university's purchase of a new president's house. It caused a great deal of confusion among myself and my fellow classmates that Western would or could spend $165,000 for a three-bedroom house that needs $35,000 worth of repairs. It sounded a bit absurd to us that such a large amount of money would be spent on a single house for one man and his family.

I do not mean to show disrespect for the office of the president, for the office is indeed a very prestigious, honored and respected position. But $165,000 is enough money to pay for the tuition plus room and board of 42 students for four full years of college. And that, in student language, "Is a lot of bucks, Buddy."

I have just a few questions. If they could be answered by the Herald staff I would appreciate it.

First, where does the College Heights Foundation acquire its funds? Secondly, if the College Heights Foundation is only going to pay for $97,000 of the property, who is going to pay for the other $90-100,000 of the cost of the house? I certainly hope that it is not the students of Western who think that the money they pay to attend this university is being used to help in bettering the school for them.

Liked Gregory speech

I would like to make a comment about the lecture that Mr. Dick Gregory gave here at Western March 22. Throughout his speech, Mr. Gregory stressed the fact that this nation would not achieve the strength that it will need to survive the future unless there is a unity among the young people of our nation, who, needless to point out, will be the government of tomorrow.

Through the way in which Mr. Gregory spoke of the young blacks and the young whites during his speech, he made the barrier between the two very obvious.

What I feel was missing is the stress that should have been placed on the fact that no unity will be made if all the blacks unite and all the whites unite, but only if the blacks and whites unite as a whole, as a nation of people who can put away their prejudices and create a country that can work for all its people.

It's not so much our white man-run government which needs to change but this feeling of difference between the types of Americans. If this change is made today, there will be no white man-run government tomorrow.

So why don't we quit playing our little racism games, youth and realize that when the recess is over, we're all going to need to be standing on the same side of the playground?

Offended by novel

Regarding novels that are required to be read in most English 102 classes, I feel that more consideration should be put into the selecting of these novels. I am in English 102 this semester and recently finished reading one of my required books: "All the King's Men."

In my opinion, it was a poor choice. I and other classmates were offended by much of the vulgarity and needless taking of the Lord's name in vain. If teachers desire students to read such books, I feel that it should be totally optional.

If the Western administration is so concerned about protecting its students' morals by not allowing unlimited open house, then it certainly should not force the reading of novels dealing with such immoral issues. I don't claim to be perfect, but I do claim to be a Christian, and I am definitely offended when, in order to fulfill my requirements of a class, it includes reading such books. I am in no means trying to get out of any work; I just feel that a more appropriate book could have been selected.

Iranians may be asked to pay bills in advance

Because political turmoil in Iran has made it difficult for Iranian students in America to get money from home, Western may take further steps to ensure that the students pay their fees here.

"We may require that they make some sort of advance payment," A.J. Thurman, financial aid director, said. "I would assume that most universities will go to some kind of a deposit."

Thurman said the problem has been discussed, but nothing has been finalized. If someone (from Iran) were to apply now, I'm not sure what would happen. But, he emphasized, there has been no great change.

When foreign students accept a loan from Western, they must sign a statement "regarding the money aspect," Thurman said. "We have loaned money in the past, but I'm not sure what the future will hold for all foreign students."

Of the money available here for student loans, about 90 percent is federal funds, which can't be loaned to non-citizens, Thurman said. That leaves 10 percent, all supplied by the College Heights Foundation, for foreign students to borrow.

"In our philosophy, a student is a student," Thurman said. "We would attempt to help anybody (financially)."

Raymond Lui, foreign student adviser, and Admissions Director Thomas Updike were unavailable for comment.

The Bride (Jonell Mosser) argues with the Bridegroom (David Myers Gregory) during "Blood Wedding" dress rehearsal. The play opens tonight at 8:15.

Tragic love story 'Blood Wedding' opens tonight

The modern Spanish poet and playwright, Federico Garcia Lorca wrote his play "Blood Wedding" after he was inspired by a newspaper account of a conflict between two families in Almeria, Spain.

The tragic story of love that cannot become marriage will be presented at 8:15 tonight through Saturday in Russell Miller Theater in the fine arts center. There will be a matinee at 3 pm. on Sunday. Admission to the play, directed by Patricia Minton-Taylor, is $2.

The story, set in Castile, Spain, among the primitive hill people, concerns the marriage of the Bride (played by Jonell Mosser) and the Bridegroom (David Myers Gregory). After her marriage, the Bride realizes she is still in love with her ex-fiance Leonardo (John Parsons) and decides to run away with him, causing an insurmountable conflict that leads to a tragic end.

Other main characters include: the Mother (Vicky Davis); the Neighbor Woman (Anne E. Gorman); Leonardo's Wife (Debra Stevens); Leonardo's Mother-in-law (Holly Watts); the Bride's Father (Will Ball); the Beggar Woman (Laurie Straub); the Moon (Bill Hanna) and the Servant Woman (Janet Hanson).

Joe Calk, a Paris sophomore, is assistant director and stage manager.

Allen Shaffer, a free-lance designer from Dallas, designed the set, costumes and makeup for the three-act play. Costume head is Phyllis VanCleave, a Morganfield graduate student, and costume mistress is Erin Brady, a Louisville junior.

Musical director is Jay Gaither, a Bowling Green junior. Gaither also composed the music for the play.

Choreographer is Lynn Firkins, a Bowling Green sophomore. Lighting designer is Jonathon Sprouse, a Bowling Green junior.

Reservations for the play can be made by calling 745-3121.

bathroom, figuring it was the safest part of the house. The Poynters got there first, he said, after Mrs. Pointer saw their carport disappear.

Then, Foster said, as suddenly as it began, the tornado was over.

Foster said he and Poynter then ran out to check on relatives and property. Foster said Poynter left to check on his son, Ricky, who, according to reports, was seriously injured along with two pregnant women when his mobile home was flattened by the tornado.

Foster went to see about his father's house and the store his father had leased Nadine Rutherford. There, Foster found the store demolished and Mr. and Mrs. Rutherford lying next to a wood-burning stove, covered "head to toe" with soot. "I took her (Mrs. Rutherford) to my father's house and put her on the couch," he said. Foster said Rutherford took his wife to the hospital shortly afterward.

Considering the damage to the store, the damage to Foster's father's house—25 yards away—was slight. Foster said the tornado ripped away shingles, and "put a hole the size of a softball" in the roof, caused by flying debris from the store.

After contemplating the damage to property, Foster was most distressed with the child's death.

Jeffrey White, 21-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Terry White of rural Glasgow, was killed when the Rutherford's store collapsed, according to reports.

Foster said he had served as a groomsman in White's wedding, and White had served in Foster's wedding.

"That's the hardest part to take," Foster said. "The buildings are nothing compared to the life that was lost."

For the record...

Terry Deweyne Williams, 728 Speckart Court, Louisville, a former Western student, was arrested by campus police Friday and charged with theft of more than $100.

Don Cameron Livers, 2612 Pearce-Ford Tower, an Indianapolis junior, was arrested by campus police Wednesday and charged with theft of less than $100. He was lodged in Warren County Jail. Bond was set at $20.

Mark James Tanner, 129 Kean Hall, a Danville freshman, reported Wednesday that $60 was stolen from his dorm room.

A female student reported an indecent exposure incident in the graduate center Friday.

from windows. But that presents another problem. The stairwells in Poland Hall should be avoided because they have windows, according to Public Safety.

Aleena Atkinson, Gilbert Hall director, said she didn't know what she would do. "I would probably pull the fire alarm," she said.

Three other dorm directors interviewed gave their plans for getting the residents to safe areas and identified the safe areas.

Miss Atkinson said one flaw in the system is that it relies on RAs going door to door, and RAs are not always on their floors.

Lynne Cosby, Potter College secretary, said there is a sign posted in the dean's office in the fine arts center with instructions on how to notify people in the building.

She said everyone in the building could get to safety within eight minutes.

Henry Hardin, academic services dean, said he would notify Helm and Cravens libraries "very slowly, I'm afraid."

"I don't really think it (the warning system) would work, but I hope it would," Hardin said.

It could take 10 minutes to warn everyone and get them into a safe area, Hardin said. How long it would take depends on the time the tornado hit. If it were during the regular work day and phones were working, it wouldn't take as long to warn the people.

Garrett Conference Center, Academic Complex, Diddle Arena, the College of Education Building and Grise Hall personnel identified the safe areas in their buildings and explained their evacuation plans.

Many have inquired about what happens after 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and all day on weekends, since tornadoes don't always follow office hours and make an appointment.

President John Minton said, "We would mainly be looking to security and physical plant personnel for weekends."

Minton said it would take just a few minutes to get word of an approaching tornado across campus, even on weekends.

Dr. James Davis, academic affairs vice president, said he would call two assistant deans to help occupants of buildings he is responsible for—most of the classroom buildings.

Davis said he and assistant deans have phone numbers of building directors or department heads who would be in charge of the buildings.

Candidates forum planned tonight

Forum '79, a gubernatorial candidates' panel sponsored by Associated Student Government, Phi Delta Kappa and the Faculty Senate, is set for 7:30 tonight in Van Meter Auditorium.

Democratic candidates scheduled to attend are Carroll Hubbard and George Atkins. Lt. Gov. Thelma Stovall, who is also running for governor, cannot attend but may send a representative, according to ASG President Steve Thornton.

One Republican candidate—Ray White—will attend the forum, Thornton said.

Thornton said Ralph Ed

Graves, the first Democratic candidate to drop out of the race, probably will not attend.

Questioning the candidates will be a four-member panel: English professor Tom Jones, representing state faculty senate leaders; Bobby Dee Gunnell, outgoing Student Government Association of Kentucky president; Richard Wilson, Courier-Journal reporter; and Ron Mitchell, Park City Daily News reporter.

Dr. Randall Cappa, communication and theater department head, will be the moderator.

The final 5 . . .

Floridian may return to Hill

By BRYAN ARMSTRONG

In 1957 a student at Louisville Valley High School named Kern Alexander turned down a chance to play football for Western, instead taking a larger scholarship that Centre College in Danville had offered him.

Twenty-two years later, the former athlete may return to the school that he's had ties with since he was a little boy—as Western's fifth president.

Dr. Samuel Kern Alexander Jr., 39, is now the University of Florida's interdisciplinary institute director and finance expert. Reached Sunday in Miami, Alexander said he was "interested in Western because it's Western."

"I've always looked up to Western and have a great admiration for the institution," he said. "It's an institution I've always wanted to be associated with."

Alexander was nominated for the presidency by Dr. Felix Robb of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools. Western Regents Tom Emberton, Ron Sheffer and Ron Clark and Tom

Uproar surrounds Baxter

By ALAN JUDD

Controversy and the term of Dr. Norman Baxter as president of California State University at Fresno have gone hand in hand.

At least that's what observers of Baxter's performance as president say. "He's been controversial, to say the least," said Eric Strom, a reporter for the Fresno Bee and a 1971 California State graduate.

But Baxter said the controversies surrounding his administration have not been unique to him. The two previous presidents left under controversial circumstances.

"This has been a campus that has had a number of problems and a lot of controversy surrounding it," he said.

Among other things, Baxter, one of the five presidential finalists at Western, has:

—Gotten a 77.8 percent vote of no confidence from the university's faculty. (Of the school's 950 faculty members, 463 responded to a survey asking whether they approved or disapproved of Baxter as president.)

Bullard respected—by some

By CATHERINE HANCOCK

Dr. Todd H. Bullard calls himself an educational "generalist," but others describe him in more definitive terms.

Some say the Rochester Institute of Technology official is a model administrator. "I think he's qualified to be provost or president of any institution in the country," Paul Miller, former RIT president, said.

But others, including Keith Jackson, a former Western instructor who later taught at RIT, think Bullard isn't the man for Western.

"My personal opinion is that he's a very strong, very domineering, very Marine-type person," Jackson said. "He's certainly not the easygoing person you associate with Dero Downing (former Western president) or the Southern lifestyle."

But almost all agree that the 6-foot-2, 220-pound Bullard knows a lot about academics.

UT-C head unsure about job

By DAVID WHITAKER

While the Board of Regents will be deciding if it wants Dr. James E. Drinnen Jr., he'll be deciding if he wants the board.

Drinnen, chancellor of University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, is one of five candidates still in the running for Western's presidency. In an interview Saturday, he said he'd been to Western's campus only twice—both times for UT-C-Western football games. But, he said, he's interested in becoming the chief administrator here.

James Irvine, a former chairman of the University of Chattanooga Foundation, spoke to Drinnen soon after Western's regents announced the final five candidates.

"He wasn't sure if he wanted it (the job) because he didn't know enough about Western," Irvine said. "He's not a man to jump at a fever like this without knowing the facts."

Drinnen, citing his legal background—he was a practicing lawyer in 1965 and legal counsel to Tennessee's university system for six years—stressed that he always tries to get the facts before making decisions.

"I'd say that I'm very

Zacharias 'no hot head'

By TIM FISH

Dr. Donald Zacharias isn't one to move around.

If Zacharias is selected Western's president, it will be only the third university he has worked at in the last two decades.

He has had several positions at Indiana University and The University of Texas system, which includes 13 colleges, in the 20 years, but he said once he gets to a place, he likes to remain there.

Born 35 miles north of Louisville in Salem, Ind., Zacharias said he's familiar with Kentucky. He received his bachelor's degree in 1957 from Georgetown (Ky.) College, and he said he knows the state's history and geography.

Zacharias, 43, who is now executive assistant to the University of Texas system chancellor, said he didn't apply for Western's presidency but was nominated by Dr. Regis O'Connor, communications and theater professor, and Craig Taylor, sociology professor, both from Western.

He said he accepted the nomination because he has had administrative experience and wanted to become a university president while he was still young.

Robert L. Hardesty, vice chancellor for administration at the Texas system, said, "He the committee members thought that they might want to consider asking some of the candidates for information that could have constituted an invasion of privacy if that information had been released.

However, Carl T. Miller Jr., an assistant state attorney general, said by telephone from Frankfort last night that the committee may have violated the state's open meetings law by closing the meeting.

(Kentucky's open meetings law prevents public agencies from closing their meetings to the public except when matters including personnel, acquisition or sale of real estate, pending litigation, collective bargaining are discussed.)

"This sounds like more of a physical matter—costs and timing—and that wouldn't qualify as an exemption (from the law)," Miller said.

Board Chairman J. David Cole said last night that the committee had the power only to make plans for the candidates' visits to the university and that the committee could not consider the qualifications of any candidate.

However, Cole said, "They (the committee members) are involved in the selection process. They are going to be discussing those five individuals (the finalists). I would have gone into closed session if I had been there."

"We have reputations to protect."

Clark said after last night's meeting that the committee did not discuss the qualifications of candidates.

Miller said that though he wasn't sure, he didn't think the committee could use discussion of personnel matters—one of five exemptions to the open meetings law.

Overlooked

4 candidates from Western bypassed in final round

By AMY GALLOWAY
and ALAN JUDD

When there are winners, there will always be losers.

And while the winners get a lot of attention, the losers often are given little thought. But the three administrators and one teacher from Western who were dropped from consideration for president Saturday must continue to work here, as if the competition for president had never existed.

Although Western is a school with strong traditional ties, the Board of Regents' list of five candidates eliminated Dr. Paul Cook, budget director and assistant to the president; Dr. James Davis, academic affairs vice president; Dr. Gene Farley, educational leadership professor; and Dr. Marvin Russell, Ogden College dean.

Board Chairman J. David Cole said after the meeting it was not surprising that all "insiders" were eliminated from the selection process.

"We said at the outset that our desire was to retain qualified and experienced individuals, taking into consideration the present needs of Western," Cole said.

"In my opinion," Cole said, "all of the 14 are extremely qualified and all 14 are capable to be president of this university."

When contacted Sunday, the four expressed varying degrees of disappointment and support of the continuing selection process. All four declined to comment on the top five.

Davis said that although he had seriously considered the job, he was not concerned about his exclusion from the final five.

"I can say I really don't have any disappointment," he said. "I feel sure of these five people, the university will get a fine leader."

Davis would not comment on whether he thought the selection of an out-of-stater would hurt the university.

"The committee had to make a decision," he said. "Whether they were from Western or not really shouldn't have mattered."

Russell also said he was not disappointed about his elimination from the final phase of the process.

"I think that's a judgement that the board has to make, and I respect their judgment."

Russell said, however, that he was disappointed that they made a "comparison of credentials" which, he said, appeared in the Park City Daily News. (Sunday's Daily News listed the credentials of the top five candidates.)

"I believe my credentials were up there with everyone else's," he said.

Russell, too, believes the new president will not be hindered by his non-Kentucky status.

"I've supported strongly the concept to get the leader wherever he might be or whoever he might be," Russell said.

Farley said he doesn't "have any complaints," but he does think he was equally qualified for the job.

"In fact, I think I'm better," he said. "I know the people, the school and the state." He added that he believes the other Western officials were also "just as well qualified."

But, he said, "that's just my opinion and that's neither here nor there."

Cook took a similarly philosophical attitude toward his elimination from the list.

"Obviously, when you're in something like this, there is an element of disappointment."

Cook labeled speculation on why the board did not include someone from within the university as "second guessing."

"The board obviously doesn't think (it is important)."

Cole said negative reactions from alumni will not be a problem.

"I hope the strength and credibility of the process thus far would offset those types of feelings," he said. "Obviously, some people would prefer those we didn't select."

positions at West Virginia University, Bullard became president of Potomac State College of West Virginia University in 1964.

He took the jobs of provost and academic affairs vice president at Rochester at the request of Miller, who became RIT's president after working with Bullard in West Virginia.

Since then, Miller said, Bullard has made a name for himself as an academic administrator.

"Todd Bullard is one of the top two or three administrators with whom I've ever worked or met," said Miller, a former assistant secretary of the U.S. Health, Education and Welfare department. His performance at RIT has "been nothing short of miraculous."

"Roughly 40 percent of students who came here last fall were in academic programs that have been put in since he's come."

Richard M. Eisenhart, RIT board of trustees chairman, agreed with Miller. "He is absolutely a top-flight administrator and has done a very good job of leading that group (RIT's nine academic college deans)."

Part of Bullard's job as "the overall operator of the university," Miller said, is heading the budget committee. And, according to Miller, Bullard can handle money as well as he can plan curriculums.

"He is a superb handler of finances... Anyone who deals with Todd Bullard in the handling of money can sleep well at night."

The administration apparently has a high opinion of Bullard, but some instructors and students have contrasting views of him.

"I think many of his actions don't have the best interests of the students involved," Mike Schwartz, editor of RIT's student magazine, said. He added that Bullard is a "hard-line conservative all the way."

"The more liberal and open-minded faculty have conflicts with him," Schwartz said. "The more conservative faculty members just think he's dandy."

Jackson said that conflicts between Bullard and others were frequent. "There were very strong conflicts between the provost and the president (Miller)," he said. "And Bullard has been at odds with a lot of people most of the time."

Jackson characterized RIT's faculty as discontented and said he would be "very surprised" if Bullard became Western's president.

Jackson and Schwartz said many think Bullard is looking for another job because he wasn't chosen to succeed Miller, who retired last fall.

Bullard finished second to a man not then associated with RIT and, Schwartz said, he was "very disappointed."

"That's obviously why Bullard is looking for a new position," Jackson said.

But Miller said Bullard is looking for another job because, after nine years at RIT, "he is ready for a new and larger responsibility."

Bullard says he has no strong desire to leave RIT. "I've been very well treated here, and I'm quite happy here," he said. "You don't stay nine years if you're not."

good educational range and scope," Bullard said. "I like that kind of diversity. It seems to me it gives an institution strength."

Bullard said that Western appears to be "not just doing a lot of things, but doing a lot of things well."

Western's location is attractive to Bullard, a West Virginia native. Though he has never lived in Kentucky and has no formal ties to the state, he has traveled here and, he said, his five children are excited about the possibility of moving to this part of the country.

development of new academic programs and evaluation of old ones."

Since graduating from West Virginia's West Liberty State College in 1953 with a bachelor's degree in history and political science, Bullard has received a master's degree and doctorate in political science from West Virginia University and the University of Pittsburgh, respectively.

His experiences as an educator have included research work, teaching social science classes and serving as education director at West Virginia State Penitentiary in 1953.

About the prison position, Bullard said, "I went to that position because it sounded very interesting." Though he didn't work there long, Bullard developed an educational program at the prison and learned much about educational problems.

Bullard said that if he were selected he didn't know whether he would make any major changes in Western's faculty, programs or policies. If chosen, he would get acquainted with Western before making such a decision.

"If I were to go to Western, it would not be with a master plan in my pocket."

'I think many of his actions don't have the best interests of the students involved.'

—Mike Schwartz, editor of RIT student magazine

Bullard said he did not know who nominated him for the Western job and that he is "under consideration" for jobs elsewhere.

The "regional and state pride and hope" he thinks Western demonstrates are prime factors in his desire to come here, Bullard said.

"And Western seems to have a

Bullard said that his experience was "strongly tilted toward academics," although he has experience in many educational fields.

As academics vice president, Bullard said, he is the "chief academic officer" at RIT. "I'm concerned with the faculty in the sense of appointments, retention and promotion and with pragmatic and practical in my approach to any solution," Drinnon, 40, said. "I work in a systematic, logical fashion."

Although he has no contacts at Western and hasn't met any staff members here, Drinnon said he wouldn't be afraid to work in a new setting.

"I'm not at all concerned about it," he said. He said he was pleased with meetings with regents Ronnie Clark and Tom Emberton, who visited Drinnon as part of the screening process.

When Drinnon took over as chancellor of UT-C in 1973, he had to make substantial adjustments, Irvine said. In fact, at the first of his term, Drinnon also was executive assistant to the president and vice president for administration for the University of Tennessee system, which comprises seven campuses, including UT-C.

"You can go in and debate for lengthy periods. He's the type who admits his mistakes and corrects them."

—Charles Temple
UT-C administrator

"He came under somewhat difficult conditions," Irvine said. "But he quickly made friends. He showed rare judgment and worked well with his staff and the foundation."

(The University of Chattanooga Foundation is a private organization that provides about a half million dollars yearly in funds to UT-C. It was formed in 1969, when the university of that name merged with six other state schools to form the state university system.)

"I've been very impressed with his ability to keep in touch with all the publics he must answer to," Irvine said.

Nancy Hartis, a Chattanooga Times newspaper reporter who covers UT-C, had a different view of Drinnon, though.

"He tries his best to keep a low profile, she said. "He usually speaks through his public relations office. My impression is that he's a well-guarded person. He picks his words carefully."

Charles Temple, UT-C executive vice chancellor, said Drinnon is "well versed on the needs and demands of higher education. He has unlimited potential." Temple, who has worked closely with Drinnon on the central administration of the school for seven years, said, "He's very open minded."

"You can go in and debate with him for lengthy periods. He's the kind who admits his mistakes and corrects them."

Drinnon said being chancellor qualifies him to handle the highest position at Western. Besides practical experience, Drinnon has a doctorate in jurisprudence, a bachelor of science degree and a doctorate in education, all from the University of Tennessee.

When Drinnon was appointed chancellor, UT-C had an enrollment of 4,000, according to several sources. Since then, the school's population had grown to almost 7,100, partly because of Drinnon's leadership, Irvine said.

"I think it would be fair to say that the growth has been enhanced by his presence here," he said. "He has also had a great deal to do with maintaining a high-quality faculty."

"He's a competent, cooperative administrator."

Miss Hartis said Drinnon has been involved in a recent controversy concerning use of public funds for renovation of a garage at his home. She could not be more specific.

Drinnon said work had been done on his house, but, "it had gone through all the proper channels and had been approved."

Dr. Frank Bonner, Furman University provost, nominated Drinnon for Western's presidency without conferring with the Morristown, Tenn., native. Drinnon said he has been nominated for three other such positions in the past four years, but none of them are pending now.

Drinnon said he does not know what staff changes, if any, he would make or what salary he would want if chosen Western's fifth president. Drinnon said his current salary is in the "$40,000-a-year range."

Drinnon, who is married and has three children, said: "I would view the job at Western as permanent. You can see by my record I'm not one to look around (for jobs)." (Drinnon has been connected with Tennessee universities since 1965.)

If he were appointed here, Drinnon said, his two teenage children would be especially concerned.

"We'll discuss it at the proper time as a family," he said.

Should the regents pick Drinnon and he were to accept, some wouldn't want to see him take the position.

"There is a concern of all administrators of what we'd do without him," Temple said. "I can't think of anybody I'd rather work for."

Herbert L. Oakes, vice chairman of the university foundation's board of trustees, said: "He's very understanding of problems we deal with in allocating funds. He's straightforward."

"Incidentally, we don't want you guys to take him away from us."

California official under review

—Fired or had others fire teachers and administrators with whom he had differences of opinion. Courts have overturned at least two of those dismissals.

—Asked for a review of his administration by the California State University and College Board of Trustees, which oversees all state-owned colleges and universities in California.

Strom said that such a review is uncommon and that its verdict next month could cause Baxter to lose his job.

Baxter wouldn't say what will happen as a result of the review, which he said he supported.

"If they don't hire him in Kentucky, he could lose his job."

—Eric Strom
reporter for Fresno Bee

Bruce Scott, managing editor of the Daily Collegian, California State's student newspaper, said several major campus organizations—including faculty and student governing bodies—have asked Baxter to resign since last September's largely negative faculty vote.

Baxter said the problems came from historic dissatisfaction and from collective bargaining by the faculty.

Strom said the no-confidence vote stemmed from the firing of the dean of the university's business school. Last June, Strom said, Baxter and the dean had "a difference of opinion" about the use of a proposed campus building.

Baxter wanted the building to be a $6.7 million computer center, and the dean wanted it to be used for classrooms, according to Tom Maurer, editor of the Daily Collegian.

"Baxter fired the dean after (the latter) went public with it (the disagreement)," Strom said.

"From that point on, Baxter couldn't work with his faculty very well," Maurer said.

Baxter said the dean had been dismissed from his previous job with a food company in Chicago before he came to California State. He also said that he dismissed the dean because of the dispute.

After the firing and the no-confidence vote, Baxter said, he asked the state board of trustees to review his administration.

The results of the review had been planned to be announced last week, but it was put off until May, Strom said.

The review of Baxter's administration brings up an inevitable question: Will Baxter survive the review?

"If they don't hire him in Kentucky, he could lose his job," Strom said. "But the trustees have been very close-mouthed about it, and Baxter won't say a thing."

Maurer said sources close to the review have told his newspaper that the trustees are displeased with Baxter's performance.

"I don't see how he's going to get out of it this time," Maurer said.

The dismissal was nothing new to Baxter's administration.

The chairman of California State's English department was fired in 1971 over a "political difference" with Baxter, Strom said.

"They barred the professor's office with big steel bolts," after the firing, Strom said.

Two other dismissed professors took their cases to court, where it was ordered that they be re-instated. One returned to California State and is still teaching there, Strom said.

Baxter, 53, became president at California State, which has an enrollment of about 15,000, in 1970. He had been the school's vice president the previous year.

Other positions Baxter has held include academic affairs vice president at Little Rock (Ark.) University from 1966 to 1969; professor, dean and acting president at New York Theological Seminary in New York City from 1961 to 1965; and professor at Eastern College in St. Davids, Pa., from 1954 to 1957.

Baxter received a bachelor's degree in 1945 from Taylor

University in Upland, Ind., a divinity degree in 1948 from New York Theological Seminary and a doctorate in 1954 from Harvard University.

He is married and has three married children.

Baxter said Western's reputation is the reason he wants to be president here.

"I think the general reputation at Western is very good, and it seems to be the kind of institution with which I'm most familiar."

He said programs and budgets at Western and California State are similar.

Baxter said he wouldn't make many staff changes if he were selected president. "My basic approach is that I would endeavor to work with the people who are there . . . until I've had time to access performances."

He said he is most concerned in university administration with academic development.

He said he has never been to Western's campus.

Scott said the prevailing opinion at California State is that Baxter should leave:

"We'll be glad to let you have him."

Club will research recreation needs

A new campus organization plans to research students' recreational needs and preferences by using a "scientific" approach.

The Committee for Better Activities at Western was officially recognized by the university March 30, according to Kenny Cooke, a Bowling Green junior, who is the group's temporary chairman and spokesman.

Cooke said his group plans to see whether students' recreational and activities needs are being met by the current programming organizations—the University Center Board and Associated Student Government.

Cooke said his group will use market research methods drawn up by the recreation department to see what kinds of concerts and other activities students here would like.

The results of that research will be presented to ASG and Sunshine Promotions, which produces Western's concerts.

Alexander has ties with Western

Jones, Faculty Senate chairman, visited Alexander last month.

Born in Cumberland County, Alexander lived in Bowling Green for five years during childhood. "Dr. Tate Page (former College of Education dean) used to talk to me about coming to Western. I wanted to go, but a few other schools offered me full scholarships."

"Everyone in my family went to Western — my father, mother, sisters and brothers." His father, Samuel Kern Sr., retired as Kentucky's deputy superintendent of public instruction in 1976.

Alexander received his bachelor's degree in English and history from Centre in 1961 and got a master's degree from Western one year later. Since then, he's obtained a doctorate of education from Indiana University and has had post-graduate study at Oxford University in England.

Alexander has written 15 books, most dealing with finance and education, and has helped formulate numerous other studies and articles on the same subjects. "His specialty is higher education," Hugh Cunningham, the University of Florida's information director, said.

"I'd say he knows as much about the government of higher education as anybody," Cunningham said. "Last year, there was an amendment to make a state Board of Regents part of the Florida constitution. Alexander did all the research for the legislature and gained tremendous respect for his research ability. Everybody respects him."

Cunningham, a former newspaper employee in Florida and Texas, had nothing but praise for Alexander as a person and an administrator.

"I don't know any other institution I'd leave the University of Florida for."

—Dr. Kern Alexander

"He's just got a wonderful personality," Cunningham said. "We would hate to lose him; he's a great one. Your student body would especially love him. He's that kind of man."

Cunningham's compliments were echoed by Dave McCormick, a reporter for the Gainesville Sun. (The University of Florida is in Gainesville.)

"He's not a headline-maker," McCormick said, "but he's very well respected in his profession."

One of Alexander's major accomplishments in finance was heading a study for the national Institute of Educational Finance from 1968 to 1972. "It was the largest study of educational finance in the country's history," he said.

Though his credentials as interdisciplinary institute director don't match those in finance, Alexander coordinates the research projects of 56 professors in eight of the University of Florida's colleges. That work is done for the university human resources department.

His immediate supervisor in human resources is Dr. David Smith, College of Education dean. "He (Alexander) has been very successful in attracting federal grants," Smith said. "I've been more than satisfied; he's been most effective in every single way."

"He's vigorous and driving and has been able to accomplish things without turmoil."

If he were hired here, Alexander said, he would leave Western's administration largely intact: "My philosophy is that the people there know the system best. If an outsider comes in, he must utilize the people there, or he'll never succeed."

One administrator Alexander might bring along is his wife, Ruth, Florida's women's athletics coordinator. She has played a large part in building a powerful Gator program, Cunningham said. The Florida women's swimming, tennis and golf teams are among the nation's best.

Should the Alexanders and their four sons, ages 9 to 16, leave Florida, it wouldn't be because of a lucrative financial offer from Western. Although the next president here will make more than $50,000 a year, and Alexander's current base salary is $40,000, he would sustain a large loss in outside income by accepting the presidency.

"My various consulting activities substantially exceed my salary," he said. "There's no doubt about that."

Alexander said that he isn't dissatisfied in Florida and isn't necessarily looking to leave his school.

"As far as I'm concerned, the job I have now is the best in the United States. But I don't know any other institution I'd leave the University of Florida for."

Zacharias liked, colleague says

(Zacharias) has earned the affection and respect of the Board of Regents, members of the system administration and his fellow professionals and students."

Hardesty's secretary casually said Zacharias is "a remarkable man."

His job with the Texas system is mainly "problem solving" and developing new programs, he said.

Laura Tuma, reporter for the University of Texas at Austin student newspaper, described Zacharias's job as a "personal adviser" to the chancellor.

She said Zacharias took his present job so he could get back to teaching. "It's not really as much (of an administrative position) as others are," Miss Tuma said.

He's "not a hot head" and is a very well liked, and dependable person, she said. When Zacharias was still a presidential assistant, a controversial new president was chosen, and many faculty and administrators resigned from several special committees. Zacharias was one of the few that stayed, she said.

Zacharias recently spoke here on university administration and he later said he had a good rapport with the administration, and he likes what the university is trying to achieve.

He said he is not very familiar with the present Kentucky government, and the only thing he knows about Gov. Julian Carroll and the state Council on Higher Education is what people have told him. But, he said, there are probably Georgetown alumni in governmental positions who could help him if he were chosen president.

Zacharias said he makes $39,000 a year at his present job, which he said he has no desire to leave. "I'm very happy at what I'm doing." He said he wasn't aware of what the president's salary is here.

He has had several major job offers, he said, but, "I'm not actively pursuing any other positions at this point."

The five candidates will be visiting the university soon, but Zacharias said the Board of Regents hasn't notified him about when he will be at Western.

Beside being an administrator and teacher, Zacharias helped write a book entitled "Organizational Communication," and has written chapters and sections for several other management and communication books.

Among his other activities, Zacharias was appointed to serve on a University of Texas System committee to develop the Texas Institute of Higher Education Management.

Revival

Pageant, gone since 1975, won by 'nervous' freshman

By KATHY LAM

After disappearing four years ago, the Miss Western pageant has returned. The audience at Van Meter Auditorium Saturday night saw not only the crowning of Laura Hubbard, but also the revival of a Western tradition.

Mary Anne Chinn, pageant coordinator, said the event was discontinued in 1975 because no one would sponsor it.

"It got to be too much work for an office like student affairs or a group like IFC (Interfraternity Council) to handle, so it just died," she said.

Hubbard, a freshman music major from Leitchfield, was chosen from 11 contestants by a panel of three judges.

Markita Key, a Glendale junior, was first runner-up; Kim Gauthier, a Louisville freshman, was second runner-up; Robin Carr, a Bowling Green sophomore, was third runner-up; and Betty Thompson, a Bowling Green junior, was fourth runner-up. Carr was also named Miss Participation for selling the most advertising space for the program.

"I still haven't really soaked it all in yet," Hubbard said. "I was surprised that I had won."

"I was nervous at first until the talent competition," she said.

"After that, I was okay," Hubbard said. "I Am Woman," by Helen Reddy.

The contestants were judged in talent, swimwear and evening gown competition. They were also interviewed by the judges: Kathy Witt of Bowling Green, the 1970 Miss Western winner, and Lisa and Ray DeCamillis of Louisville. Mrs. DeCamillis is a former runner up in the Miss Kentucky pageant, and her husband serves as vice-president of the Miss

Laura
Hubbard

Kentucky Pageant board of directors.

As Miss Western, Hubbard will compete in the Miss Kentucky pageant in June.

Finalists received a total of $1,150 in scholarships. Hubbard won a $400 scholarship, the first runner up received $300, the second runner up received $200, the third runner-up received $100, the fourth runner-up received $100 and Miss Participation got $50.

The Houschens Foundation donated $250 and the rest of the scholarship money came from pageant proceeds.

In the talent competition, Key sang "Songbird," by Barbra Streisand. Gauthier performed a dramatic monologue, "Prayer for a Daughter." Carr did a modern dance routine to "Ease on Down the Road" from "The Wiz." Thompson performed a baton twirling routine to the theme from "Star Wars."

Phi Mu Alpha music fraternity sponsored the pageant. The members served on committees, sold tickets and advertising, and worked on lights, curtains and sets.

Chinn said the pageant went well enough that it would be continued next year.

"I'm just so relieved that it's all over with," Chinn said. "You can't imagine all the things that have to get done. There's more to it than meets the eye."

Middle beats Tops twice

By KEVIN STEWART

"If someone has written the script for the 'Bad News Bears' from the game, it would have fit."

That was coach Barry Shollenberger's description of the first game of a doubleheader, as Western opened Ohio Valley Conference play Saturday at Middle Tennessee.

Middle rallied for four runs in the bottom of the seventh inning to claim a 5-4 win. The rally was the straw that broke the camel's back as Middle downed Western, 7-1, in the second game.

With the doubleheader sweep, Middle jumped to an early 2-0 record in the OVC, while Western went to 0-2. Middle is 15-6 overall, and Western dropped to 12-9.

The Hilltoppers will try to improve their record when the University of Louisville arrives for a doubleheader starting today at 1 p.m. at Deneb Field.

Small-college power David Lipscomb is host to Western Wednesday for a single game at 1 p.m. in Nashville, Tenn.

Shollenberger's comparison to the comedy baseball movie seemed justified as a combination of bad breaks and indecisions led to the Toppers' downfall.

Western had a 4-1 lead going into the bottom of the seventh when the first bad break came.

Middle's Chris Faulkner opened the inning with a drive to left field off losing pitcher Mark Biven.

Left-fielder Walt McThenny turned his back to the plate and sprinted back to catch the fly ball. McThenny hesitated, got his glove on the ball and then dropped it as Faulkner coasted into second base.

Baseball

After a Middle out, Mike Killian doubled home Faulkner to make it 4-2.

Biven then walked Tony Zakotnik on five pitches on what Shollenberger termed "questionable-calls."

With runners at first and second, Middle's Wade King hit a ground ball to second. Ron Rocco scooped up the ball and threw to Mike Murray at second to start a game-ending doubleplay.

But Rocco's throw was low, causing Murray to force the runner at second but not have time to get the runner at first.

Then came the indecision. Murray, unable to complete the throw to first, whirled and threw to third, catching Killian off the base. Third-baseman Kenny Fox apparently had the runner trapped for the out, but Fox hesitated on the tag and Faulkner slid safely back.

Mark Gittens replaced Biven after Biven's walk loaded the bases.

Middle's Bobby Hines hit Gittens' first pitch, a low breaking ball, up the middle, and Rocco fielded it cleanly.

Rocco looked to second, then threw off-balance to Mark Williams at first. Williams came up with the low throw but not in time to get Hines as the tying run scored.

Williams then threw wildly to home as the winning run scored.

"The first game was really crushing. We didn't pitch well, and our defense was bad," Shollenberger said. "A game like Western's Ron Rocco tries for home plate in a game against Eastern Illinois. Western won three games against the Panthers, 4-0, 7-1, 9-4, last week.

that either breaks your spirit or makes you mad enough to blow them out in the second game."

Western's spirit was apparently crushed as the Blue Raiders bombed Western, 7-1, in the nightcap.

Middle scored five runs off starter Larry Glasscock in 3 1-3 innings and two runs off reliever Ban Jones to bury Western.

The only Hilltopper run came on McThenny's seventh-inning homer off winner Mike Bratner.

Bivens dropped to 2-1 with the first-game loss, and Glasscock went to 1-4.

McThenny led the Toppers with two homers in four at-bats and Mike Green contributed a homer, double and single in the doubleheader.

Tie breaker gives Tops 1st at UT-M

When coach Betty Langley's women's tennis team left Martin, Tenn., after competing in the 10-team Martin Invitational Sunday, the Hilltoppers found themselves in first place—but not tourney champions.

And they remained "first-place" finishers until late Monday afternoon when a decision was reached that made the Toppers the tournament winners—by only 1.84 points.

In the invitational, Western and Murray each finished with 44 points. Tournament officials tried to pick a winner by applying a tie-breaking method to see which team had the lower percentage games lost.

And Western finished with 38.91 percent of games lost, while Murray had a 40.75 percentage.

Ole Miss, last year's tourney champion, finished third with 43 points, followed by Mississippi State (37) and Middle Tennessee (35).

The Toppers' Sandy Leslie, a freshman who was seeded No. 5 in the tournament, knocked off the Nos. 2, 3 and 4 seeds en route to winning the singles championships at the No. 1 position.

Sophomore Betsy Bogdan won the singles championship at the No. 4 position, defeating Ole Miss' Casey Hughes, 7-6, 7-6 in what Langley described as a "close and exciting match where Bogdan really hustled."

Shelley Fredlake said: "It was a great team effort. When Sandy beat the girl from Ole Miss, who won the singles championship last year (Renee Pereira), we thought we'd go on to win."

"Ole Miss just ran away with everything last year, and their team this year had the same girls," Fredlake said. "Everybody was pulling for each other—I guess Sandy was our motivating factor."

Results

No. 1 Singles—Leslie won title by def. Weiss (Murray) 7-5, 7-5
Pereira (Ole Miss) 6-3, 1-6, 6-1
Duchman (MTSU) 6-0, 6-4

No. 2—Fredlake won consolation by def. Ojala (MTSU) 6-3, 6-0

No. 3—Ferry won consolation by def. Hawkins (St. Louis U) 6-4, 6-2

No. 4—Bogdan won title by def. Hughes (Ole Miss) 7-6, 7-6

No. 5—Johnson runner-up lost to Wharther (MTSU) 5-7, 4-6

No. 1 Doubles—Leslie-Ferry won consolation, 6-2, 6-4, over St. Louis U.

No. 2—Bogdan-Fredlake lost in semifinals 5-7, 3-6 to St. Louis U.

No. 3—Summers-Johnson won consolation, 6-2, 6-2

'Team effort' against Eastern

Toppers win 2, lose 1 at Richmond

Western's men's tennis team won two of its three matches last weekend on Eastern's indoor tennis courts at Richmond.

The Hilltoppers defeated Eastern, 9-0, and Akron, 7-2. They lost to East Tennessee, 9-0.

The Toppers won only two sets against East Tennessee, last year's Ohio Valley Conference champions, who are now members of the Southern Conference.

No. 4 seed Bengt Ronnerman lost to the Buccaneers' Mark Bowling, 6-4, 1-6, 3-6, and No. 5 seed Andres Thomsen won Western's only other set but lost to Roger Grant 3-6, 7-5, 0-6.

Men's tennis

"They were stronger than they were last year," Rose said. "It's hard to be encouraged by a 9-0 loss, but we just ran into a superior team—the best team we've played all year."

The Toppers made a complete reversal from their first match by shutting out Eastern, 9-0. The Toppers won every set in the match.

"It was our best concentration for the whole year, mainly because we won all of the close matches," Rose said.

Jorge Alemparte, Western's No. 1 seed, defeated Jeff Zinn, 6-2, 6-3; No. 2 Jeff Gola beat Kurt Heuerman, 7-5, 6-1; No. 3 Hakk Ozgenel defeated Rich Vandish, 6-1, 6-1; No. 4 Bengt Ronnerman beat Mark Holestein, 6-1, 6-2; Andres Thomsen beat Bibb Landrum, and John Mark Fones beat John Rowlett, both by 6-1, 6-2 scores.

In doubles action, Gola and Osgenel beat Zinn and Holstein, 7-6, 6-1; Alemparte and Thomsen defeated Vandish and Don Briscoe, 6-2, 7-6; and Ronnerman and Fones beat Heuerman and Rowlett, 7-5, 6-3.

"It was a strong, total team victory," Rose said. "The fact that we were playing on their home courts and that they had won a few sets against East Tennessee kind of made us have to prove ourselves—and we did."

Rose attributed good play and concentration to Western's 7-2 victory over Akron.

Western will play host to Vanderbilt's "B" team Wednesday, which will include a few of the team's top players.

Several place in Florida meet

The men's track team escaped the cold and wet last weekend by going to Gainesville, Fla., where the team competed in the Florida Relays. The meet, which had collegiate and open divisions, was for individuals. No team trophy was given.

Sophomore Tim Brooks won the 5,000 meters in the collegiate division with a time of 14:04. Brooks, a native of Ft. Myers, Fla., had competed in the relays while in high school.

"The field in the 5,000 was easy, and it took less effort to win," Brooks said. "I felt sorry for the other people on the team who trained harder and gave a good effort but just finished third or fourth."

One of those people, Dave Murphy, placed third in the 5,000 meters in the open division. Murphy ran a 14:10.

"Murphy ran a good race," Hessel said. "He led most of the way and (Marty) Liquori passed him with two laps left. Liquori is more experienced and I think that gave him the edge."

Western placed second and fourth in the 400 intermediate hurdles in the open division. Don Douglas was second at :52.4, while Karl Hunter was one second behind.

Freshman Jim Groves placed second in the 10,000 meters in the open division. Groves' time of 29:44 was only :14 off the qualifying time for the national outdoor meet.

Dave Mobley took third place in the triple jump with a leap of 50 feet, 4 inches, which is a personal record.

Western's two-mile relay team, consisting of Jim Willoughby, Hondo Sheets, Ron Becht and Larry Cuzzort finished second. The four-mile relay team placed second. Willoughby, Becht, Cuzzort and Hunter were on that team, which finished behind St. John's.

Sophomore Lee Wildman threw a personal record in the discus with a distance of 154-4, but still did not make the finals. Luby Chambul did not make the trip because of a sore knee.

Marion Wingo finished fourth in his heat in the 100 meters with the top three in each heat qualifying for the finals.

Tops finish 8th of 12 after disputed race

The women's track team finished eighth of 16 teams at last weekend's Memphis State Invitational. Western scored 40 points behind Kansas with 94, Tennessee State with 85 and Western Illinois with 11 points.

Coach Carla Coffey thought the team could have finished fourth.

In the 100-meter hurdles, Gayle Watkins finished fifth with a time of 14.595 seconds. On the last hurdle, a girl fell down. According to Ms. Coffey the judges turned their attention to the girl and missed the finish of the race. Watkins was placed sixth, and Ms. Coffey filed a protest. Her finish was changed to fifth, but Ms. Coffey felt she placed fourth.

The extra points Watkins would have gotten for the fourth place finish would have moved the team standing from eighth to fourth, Coffey said.

The two-mile relay team finished fourth in 9:51.158, a school record. The team members were Cathy Anne Hyde, Gail Christofferson, Sandy Seith and Julie Pendencyraft.

Anita Jones finished first in the 400-meter hurdles in 1:03.367. Watkins was second in the long jump at 18 feet, 10 3/4 inches.

Women's track

Lindy Willingham was fourth in the discus with a throw of 115-10 3/4.

The 440 relay team was fifth in the event with a time of 50.003 seconds. The members of the team were Watkins, Sadie Clark, Gretchen Kemp and Angela Gay.

Injuries hurt the relay teams as two relay members did not compete. Sandra Thomas strained a muscle the second day of the meet. She had qualified for the final of the 100-meter dash but could not compete.

Angie Bradley did not make the trip because of shin splints.

Sandy Seith finished fourth in the 800-meter run. Her time was 2:21.460. The mile relay team came in fifth with a time of 3:58.338. The team members were Kemp, Joyce Fowler, Seith and Jones.

In the 880 medley relay final, Western finished fifth with a time of 1:54.764. Watkins, Gay, Jones and Kemp were the team members.
